

Ananova:

Chance to crush a speed camera

A businessman is offering motorists the chance to get their own back on speed cameras - by crushing them with a 17 tonne tank.

Bill Bailey, who runs a paint ball business, will set motorists up in his Abbott 433 Self Propelling Gun alongside an expert driving instructor.

They can take the caterpillar-tracked tank for a spin around a Somerset quarry, and finish the day off by mowing down a mocked-up speed camera.

"It will cost about £100 for an hour in the tank, with an extra charge of £60 to crush the speed camera," he said.

"I think it will be popular with motorists. A lot of people may think that is a reasonable price to pay to destroy a Gatso.

"There is also the option of blowing one up. The gun only fires blanks, but we can simulate an explosion at the other end with pyrotechnics."